

Table of Contents

I. Introduction: Robert E. Howard and Ernst Jünger in World Literature and History

- I.1. Comparing Robert E. Howard and Ernst Jünger
 - I.1.1. The Author Problematic in Relation to Howard and Jünger
 - I.1.2. Class Discourse
 - I.1.3. Race Discourse
 - I.1.4. The Barbarian Discourse
 - I.1.5. Kultur der Niederlage: Culture of Defeat Definition
 - I.1.6. Verhaltenslehre der Kälte: Behavioural Guidelines of Coldness
 - I.1.7. Conclusion of Introduction
- I.2. Addressing an Objection to Comparing Robert E. Howard and Ernst Jünger
 - I.2.1 The Transformative Function of Literature
 - I.2.2. Objections to Literary Criticism of Popular Culture Texts
 - I.2.3. Popular Culture Texts Have Veränderungspotential
 - I.2.4. Conclusion
- I.3. A Methodology for Comparing Robert E. Howard and Ernst Jünger
 - I.3.1. Difficulties in Establishing A Methodology
 - I.3.2. Guidelines for Establishing A Methodology
 - I.3.3. Establishing the Methodology

II. Applying the Cultural Studies Paradigm to the Works of Howard and Jünger

- II.1. Marxism: Materialism and History
- II.2. Theories of the First Layer of Form
 - II.2.1. Jung's Collective Unconscious
 - II.2.2. Lévi-Strauss and Mythic Narrative
 - II.2.3. Frye's Archetypal Criticism
 - II.2.4. The Formalism of Propp and Jolles
 - II.2.5. First Layer of Form Conclusion
- II.3. Theories of the Second and Third Layers of Form
 - II.3.1. Lachmann's Schreibweisen as the Second Layer of Form
 - II.3.2. Genre: The Third Layer of Form
- II.4. Conclusion about the Three Layers of Form
- II.5. The Ideology of Form and the Political Unconscious
 - II.5.1. History as the Untranscendable Horizon of Understanding
 - II.5.2. The Ideology of Form

II.5.3. The Theory of the Political Unconscious

II.6. Methodological Conclusion

III. Aesthetic Wirkungsstruktur

III.1. Aesthetic Wirkungsstruktur: Introduction

III.1.1. The Aesthetic Affinities of the Texts of Howard and Jünger

IV. The Cultural Archive 1870-1920: Texts and Events Relevant to the Works of Howard and Jünger

IV.1.1. The Psyche as Disunified Self

IV.1.2. God is Dead

IV.1.3. The Genealogy of Values

IV.1.4. Celebrating the Dionysian

IV.1.5. The Eternal Return and the Superman

IV.1.6. The Tragic Vision

IV.2. Rimbaud as a Voice of France's Culture of Defeat

IV.2.1. The Race and Barbarian Discourses in France's Culture of Defeat

IV.2.2. Evocation of the Victory in Tragedy

IV.2.3. The Class Struggle within France's Culture of Defeat

IV.2.4. The Revanche

IV.2.5. Death to God and the Barbarian Discourse

IV.2.6. Cimmeria, Africa and Une saison en enfer

IV.2.7. Conclusion and The Author Problematic

IV.3. Imperial Germany: The Colonial Romance and the Race Discourse

IV.3.1. The Irangi Expedition of 1898

IV.3.2. Deutsch-Südwestafrika from 1907 to 1914

IV.3.3. The Race Discourse at Home: Ost und West (1911)

IV.4. World War I: The Global Romance Narrative Gets Written

IV.4.1. Preparing the Ground in America: Maid of Mars (1916)

IV.4.2. Rosa Luxemburg and the Dawning of the Kultur der Niederlage in Germany

IV.4.3. The Waffenstillstand of 1918

IV.4.4. The Inside Story of the Peace Conference (1920)

V. Marked by the Experience of the War and the War's Official Narrative Myth: Jünger's In Stahlgewittern (1920)

V.1. Impulses to Romance

V.2. The Text as Comedy

V.3. First Horizon of a Political Unconscious Analysis

V.5. Third Horizon of a Political Unconscious Analysis

V.6. Conclusion

- VI. Responses to the War's Narrative Myth until the Great Depression (1921-29):
The Cultural Archive and the Texts of Howard and Jünger
- VI.1. Responses in Early Weimar Germany
 - VI.1.1. Siddhartha (1922)
 - VI.1.2. Die dreizehn Bücher der deutschen Seele (1922)
 - VI.1.3. Der Kampf als Inneres Erlebnis (1922)
 - VI.2. Responses in the Anglo-Saxon World
 - VI.2.1. Tros (1925-26)
 - VI.2.2. Winchester's War Records: Civil – Spanish-American – World (1925)
 - VI.3. Responses During the Middle Period of Weimar Germany
 - VI.3.1. "The Longing of Our Time for a World View" (1926)
 - VI.3.2. Volk Ohne Raum (1926)
 - VI.3.3. Faust: Eine deutsche Volkssage (1926)
 - VI.4. "Red Shadows" (1928)
 - VI.4.1. "Red Shadows" as a Romance Mythos Narrative
 - VI.4.2. The Text's Second and Third Layers of Form and Conclusion
 - VI.5. Das Abenteuerliche Herz (1929)
 - VI.5.2. The Text's Political Unconscious: First Horizon
 - VI.5.3. The Text's Political Unconscious: Second Horizon
 - VI.5.4. The Text's Political Unconscious: Third Horizon
 - VI.5.5. Conclusion
- VII. Narrative Trajectories from the Great Depression to the Nazi Machtergreifung (1929-1932)
- VII.1. Glimpses into Howard's Narrative Development
 - VII.1.1. "The Mirrors of Tuzun Thune" (1929)
 - VII.1.2. "The Hills of the Dead" (1930)
 - VII.1.3. "The Footfalls Within" (1931)
 - VII.2. Romance Mythos and Barbarian Discourse Just Before the Machtergreifung
 - VII.2.1. Nazi Sprechchöre
 - VII.2.2. "The Phoenix on the Sword" (1932)
 - VII.2.3. Der Arbeiter (1932)
 - VII.2.4. Germanien (1932)
 - VII.2.5. "The Nemedian Chronicles" and "The God in the Bowl" (1932)
 - VII.2.6. "The Tower of the Elephant" (1932)
- VIII. Narrative Trajectories after the Machtergreifung (1933-1936)
- VIII.1. The Barbarian as Guarantor of Freedom

VIII.1.1. "The Slithering Shadow" (1933)

VIII.1.2. Germanien (1934)

VIII.2. Cultural Re-Alignment under National Romance Narrative Pressure

VIII.2.1. Blätter und Steine (1934)

VIII.2.2. "The Grisly Horror" (1935)

VIII.3. The Ultimate Victory of Barbarism

VIII.3.1. "Beyond the Black River" (1935)

IX. A Prophecy of World War II (1936)

IX.1. The Hour of the Dragon (1934-36)

IX.1.1. Personal and Geo-Political "Context" of the Novel

IX.1.2. The Novel's Fantasy Genre Elements

IX.1.3. The Novel as Romance

IX.1.4. The Map of the Hyborian Age as Key to a Political Unconscious Analysis

IX.1.5. Conclusion

IX.2. "The Hyborian Age" (1932-1936)

IX.2.1. The Cimmeria Motif

IX.2.2. The Civilization vs. Barbarism Theme: Hyperborea vs. Cimmeria

IX.2.3. The Geo-Political Prophecy of One Sentence

X. Romance Dreams and Illusions (1936-1938)

X.1. "A Elkins Never Surrenders" (1936)

X.1.1. The Laughability of Romance

X.1.3. Aspects of the First Phase of Satire

X.1.4. Aspects of the Second and Third Phases of Satire

X.1.5. Conclusion

X.2. "Vultures' Sanctuary" (1936)

X.3. Germanien (1937)

X.3.1. SS Control of Deutsches Ahnenerbe

X.3.2. "Hugin" and "Munin" Ask: „Widersagst Du dem Wodan?“

X.3.3. Justification for War Through the Barbarian Discourse and the Ragnarok Motif

X.4. Deutsche Kämpfer in der grünen Hölle Kameruns (1938)

X.5. Landdienst Letter from Himmler and von Schirach

XI. Tragedy Confirmed (1939-1945)

XI.1. Auf den Marmorklippen (1939)

XI.1.1. Composition of the Text

XI.1.2. Layers of Form and Meaning

XI.1.3. Critical Agreement on the Novel's Significance

XI.1.4. Confluence of the First and Third Layers of Form: Tragedy
Mythos and Fantasy Genre

XI.1.5. The Layers of Form and Political Allegory

XI.1.6. The Narrative Structured by the Allegorical Need to Establish the Basis of the Tragedy Mythos: The Act Provoking Enmity

XI.1.7. The Text as Political Prophecy

XI.1.8. Conclusion of Third Horizon Close Reading of the Text

XI.2. NS Documents 1941-1945: The Tragic March to Ragnarok

XI.2.1. SS Germanische Leithefte (1941): Mobilizing the Barbarian Discourse

XI.2.2. Germanien (1941): The Barbarian Discourse as Justification for War

XI.2.3. Germanien and SS Germanische Leithefte (1942): Centrality of the Ragnarok Motif

XI.2.4. Verpflichtung der Jugend and Wille und Macht (1943): Total
Identification with the Ragnarok Motif

XI.2.5. Hitler's Verfügung 44/44, Wille und Macht, and Plaßmann's
Marriage (1944): Desperation for Romance

XII. The Tragedy's Final Act (1945)

XII.1. Buczacz, Caen, Nimwegen: Der Kampf der 10. SS-Panzer-Division-
Frundsberg im Jahre 1944

XII.1.1. The Text as Conclusion of the Cultural Archive of Texts Relevant to the Works of Howard and Jünger

XIII. Conclusion: Post-War Reckonings

XIII.1. Theoretical Conclusion

XIII.1.1. The Function of Literature

XIII.1.2. The Social Function of Literature

XIII.1.3. The Author-Role

XIII.1.4. Barbarian Discourse

XIII.1.5. The Three Layers of Form

XIII.2. Coda: Heliopolis

XIII.2.1. Heliopolis: Introduction

XIII.2.2. Close-Reading of Heliopolis as Re-affirmation of Theoretical Conclusion

XIII.3. Final Statement